Good afternoon, Mr. Fanning,

Your emails are being received, and your complaints will be investigated. These investigations are complex and take time, so we ask for your patience.

For your records, your complaint number is

[REDACTED]

At the end of the investigation, you will receive a letter from the Chief advising you of the disposition of your complaint. The four possible dispositions to all complaints are, Sustained, Not Sustained, Exonerated or Unfounded. This is the only information that we are legally required to provide. Depending on the disposition and the totality of the circumstances, corrective actions may be taken, including counseling, training, or discipline, which can range from written reprimands up to termination. Legally, you are not entitled to know what corrective actions are taken and no details will be provided about any corrective actions.

Thank you,

Professional Standards Division
