It's time to stop projects in the pipeline already approved and to stop approving new projects until our current emergency evacuation plan is presented to the public showing specifically how our population will be evacuated. The public can then comment on whether the plan is feasible.

Yes, I know some unelected people have told cities they have to increase their population. If residents can't escape and don't survive an emergency, who will be held accountable? Why aren't these people mandating increased population being sued? There is a plan being voted on by congress that creates a social housing authority (the Homes Act) Text - H.R.9662 - 118th Congress \(2023-2024\): Homes Act of 2024 | Congress.gov | Library of Congress

I would like to think our elected officials care about keeping our population safe.
